Customer Reviews

"These essays from a conference at the Hagley Museum and Library...attest to the growth of women in business and the welcome incursion of social and gender history into traditional business history...The mix is both interesting and potentially widely useful, not only for the study of business or women in business, but for a variety of other academic pursuits. It is a welcome addition to a growing body of literature."-Choice "Recommended for business historians and upper-division academic libraries with women's studies programs."-Library Journal

Philip Scranton is the Governor's Board Professor at Rutgers, editor of the journal Enterprise and Society, and director of research at the Hagley Center. He is author of several books, including Endless Novelty: Specialty Production and American Industrialization (1997).

My favorite economics book! Great read if you're interested in history, societal constructs of gender, economics, or business.
