A School Girl's Hero (Muslim Children's Library)

Synopsis

For days Anum didn't know who to write about for her school English competition, "Who I Aspire to Be Like." Then, while helping her mom with chores, an inspiration suddenly came to her. She shared her idea with her family and they were supportive, but then Anum began to have second thoughts. What would her peers think about her role model, who was so different from the pop stars and sports heroes they had chosen? Umm Aamina, mother of two and clinical pharmacist, is the winner of the Islamic Foundation's Sixth International Children's Story Writing Competition, held in 2007.

Umm Aamina: Mother of two and a Pharmacist by profession Umm Aamina was the winner of the Children's Story writing competition.

I bought this for my 8 year olds birthday. It was a great book, the only complaint I have is the use of racist words used as examples. My child doesn't know those words, I don't expose my children to them and blacked them out before I gave them to her because I don't even want her knowing them!

An excellent book for the young Muslims. One of my main criticism of the many Islamic story books written by many is the thoughtless use of difficult English language for books written for the young Muslims. This book is different and in my view, it is perfect. A Wonderful book and there is a lot to learn from it too. More writer's with Umm Aamina's calibre is needed. I was hoping that Umm Aamina would have written more books but my search revealed that this is the only book she has written. I hope I'm wrong and that more of her books are on the way. I urge the sister to write more books because there are no other that, in my view, matches hers. I would recommend this book to all the Muslims for their young loved ones.
